Application Review (to be completed by faculty member)
<input type="checkbox"/> Yes	I have reviewed the student's completed project proposal/application form, and discussed with the student any necessary IRB approval.

Please note that the review committee views faculty letters of support as an important aspect of a student's application for funding. Students should review their application and project overview with you prior to submission. Letters of support should highlight the following:

- A brief overview of the proposed project and the student's role
- Your goals for the student's learning
- The extent to which appropriate mentoring and support is in place (including information regarding the extent to which you and the student have collaborated on a summer plan, the frequency of meetings planned for the summer, etc.)
- The extent to which you support the proposed project and its educational value

IRB Approval

If your project involves human subjects or animal subjects, please provide the student with documentation of Brown University IRB or IACUC approval. (For human subjects, this includes data collection from living individuals through interaction or intervention, or data collection of identifiable, private information through secondary data analysis.) Students are required to submit documentation of IRB submission (or approval if available) with their application.
